

EVALUATION IN TIMES OF COVID-19

Covid-19 led to uncertainties and insecurities that permeate our everyday life and work, and as evaluators, we will have “to navigate multiple trade-offs, put ethics front and center, be willing to get out of our methodological comfort zones, and be ready to try and fail” (Raimondo et al. 2020).

DEVELOPMENT OF GUIDELINES
MARINA HÄUSERMANN, KEK – CDC
FINAL PRESENTATION, 21.11.2020

STARTING POINT

PROCEDURE

- Document analysis (focus on publications by multilateral organisations and national evaluation societies)
- Interviews and group work with consultants at KEK – CDC
- Exchange with participants of the Evaluation Hackathon
- Condensation of literature and discussions

5 KEY INSIGHTS

Ethical principles are essential, including sensitivities to stakeholders and systems under pressure.

It is important to be flexible, do realistic planning and expect and facilitate change.

Different ways of remote data collection have to be considered.

It is relevant to share results and experiences and to connect with other practitioners.

The best we can do is to understand the current challenges as an opportunity of growth.